Workshops for students

Our school participated in a Knowledge Exchange Impact

Project entitled "Narratives of Connections in Many Accents" organized by the Department of Comparative Literature of the University of Hong Kong (HKU) in March 2015. HKU lecturers and students conducted a workshop on writing short stories for S4 students, exploring the diverse cultures and languages of our city. Students were encouraged to reflect on meaningful connections they have made in their lives that involve differences in cultural background, family experience, age, religion, work etc, and how these connections have broadened their horizons. Students then produced pieces of creative writing on the topic, which would be posted on the HKU "Narratives of Connections in Many Accents" website from June 2015 onwards.

Students are invited to participate in teaching materials design

Through exploration and design, participants would be able to develop a deeper understanding of mathematical concepts. Therefore, this year, we invited some junior forms students to participate in designing teaching materials on congruence and similarity and senior forms students on trigonometry ratio. Students can benefit at the cognitive level by carrying out practical application of concepts of mathematics.

Special designed models were used when teaching difficult and abstract topic

Students' active participation is important in learning abstract mathematical concepts such as Trigonometry, Area and Volume and Probability. Therefore, we taught students to make specific designed models to visualize the concepts, so that they can understand and learn more easily and effectively. This can also help students to turn short-term memory into long-term memory.

Moral and Civic Education

We have organized various activities, including flag selling for the Chai Wan Kaifong Welfare Association, visit to the Legislative Council and the Oxfam Education Centre to learn about topics such as fair trade.
